DELIRIOUS DISCOURSE

Better late than never? Welcome to the long-delayed second issue of DELIRIUM, the essential reference guide to trash cinema.

For various reasons it's taken much longer than I anticipated to pull together the second part of what I hope you will find is an essential reference guide to Italian 'exploitation' cinema. The period covered here, 1975 - 1979, takes in some of the scuzziest films ever made, but also some of the most perversely enjoyable. If you have reservations about gratuitous sex 'n' violence then you're obviously reading the wrong publication. There are some significant improvements in this issue, with clearer visuals, more complete credits and most importantly, lots of reviews. The video information was added at the eleventh hour and is therefore somewhat patchy. With the assistance of readers I hope to develop this area.

The response to issue one was very favourable and I am delighted that I have been able to include a number of guest reviews from people who expressed a keen interest in the DELIRIUM concept. There were a few voices of dissent, mainly from those who can't understand that having easy access to information on films adds to the experience of actually watching them. Unfortunately, there will always be certain people who prefer to remain happily ignorant. DELIRIUM remains primarily a reference publication but the inclusion of more reviews, with the added diversity of opinion, makes for a more interesting read. For films which I've not seen I've given a brief plot summary. These summaries are culled mainly from Italian reference sources so don't blame me if what you see here bears little relation to the some of the films themselves!

I've included as many films as space permits while trying to reflect the range of subject matter encompassed by the exploitation genre: sex/porn, horror, gialli, sci-fi, nasty Nazis, mondo, nuns and women-in-prison films are all represented here, along with a few genre related 'comedies'. Had I more time (!) I would have liked to expand coverage to include violent crime thrillers like Mario Caiano's MILANO VIOLENTA (1976), NAPOLI SPARA! (1977) and Mario Pinzauti's DUE MAGNUM 38 PER UN CITTA' DI CAROGNE (1975).

The next issue of DELIRIUM (out sometime in 1994) will be a complete change, a one-off special devoted to the King of Radiactive Lizards - GODZILLA. Aside from the conclusion of the Italian filmography future issues will be devoted to British, Mexican and Spanish exploitation.

Alberto's preoccupation with work has an adverse effect on his relationship with his girlfriend, Christina, who seeks sexual solace with Alberto's friend Giuliano. To make matters more complicated, Giuliano also has two other mistresses, Benita and Helga. Attempted murder, accusations of rape and suicide threats are the result of the ensuing sexual tangle. Pittorru's direction is totally inept and most of the cast struggle with their roles. Only the presence of the Ms Dionisio makes this one worth watching. Director Pittorru previously co-scripted a dull 'conspiracy theory' giallo, ABUSO DI POTERE/SHADOWS UNSEEN (1972).

George Hilton plays a philandering husband who wants to get rid of his rich wife, Nora. He catches a mysterious killer disposing of a body and blackmails him into murdering his spouse. While Hilton sets up an alibi by hanging out at a party, the killer murders Nora. The inevitable plot twist occurs when a young couple steal the killer's car, complete with Nora's body in the boot, and head off to a deserted house by the sea. The killer follows... An above-average thriller, which is easily the best film that director Cozzi has made. There is an unsettling tone which is manifested most prominently when the film cross-cut between a lusty sex session in the back seat of a car and a vicious rape. Although Cozzi's later films, such as STAR CRASH (1978), HERCULES (1983) and THE BLACK CAT (1990), are undeniably fun, they are generally characterised by throwaway plots and tacky special effects.

Obscure horror thriller (released in the USA by the same company responsible for the TORSO/TEXAS CHAINSAW MASSACRE double-bill), depicting the antics of a group of hooded killers (recalling Mickey Hargitay as THE CRIMSON EXECUTIONER!) dispensing the 'ultimate' justice to ex-offenders. Despite a few minor frissons, such as the opening murder scene where a naked woman hung up and speared through the abdomen, the film never really rises above the level of mediocrity.

This juvenile spoof comes over as a sort of 'Benny Hill Meets the Exorcist'. A chubby boy finds an ancient icon and is soon up to devilish behaviour such as stealing womens' panties. The resulting buffoonery is difficult to endure, even with the assistance of the fast-forward button. Popular comedian Ciccio Ingrassia also appeared in a Dracula send up, directed by Lucio Fulci, the same year. It's intriguing to note the presence of Sergio Garrone as production manager before he went on to direct unsavoury offerings like SS EXPERIMENT CAMP.

Second Opinion: THE EXORCIST not only spawned many Italian copies and unauthorized sequels but also this parody. L'ESORCICCIO is a typical example of 70's 'commedia all'italiana', a genre that is deeply rooted in Italian popular culture and is difficult to understand or appreciate by foreigners. L'ESORCICCIO was made during a period when the comedy duo Franco Franchi and Ciccio Ingrassia had split up, although they teamed up again for more tv shows and movies until Franchi's death in 1992. The plot is a collection of gags and humorous situations in which Ingrassia, playing a swindler fake exorcist, has to help Lino Banfi (another icon of Italian comedy) and his family, who are possessed one after another by the devil in an amulet. In the end, everybody is possessed, including the exorcist himself. In one scene, a Franco Franchi impersonator is thrown out of a window without ceremony. Clearly there was no love lost between Franco and Ciccio at the time this movie was made. Max Della Mora

Milan: A young fashion model, Evelyn, suffers a fatal heart attack during a backstreet abortion. To avert suspicion, the presiding doctor arranges for her body to be taken home and placed in a bath of running water. Soon afterwards, he is brutally stabbed to death by a mysterious figure wearing a crash helmet and motorcycle leathers. A month later, employees at Studio Albatross, the photographic agency where Evelyn worked, begin to meet a similar fate... Anyone expecting the crude cinematic techniques of Bianchi's infamous LE NOTTE DEL TERRORE / THE NIGHTS OF TERROR (1980), is in for a surprise: this sleazy giallo hides its inherent griminess behind a glossy facade of crystalline widescreen photography and trendy Seventies fashions. Despite containing the usual perfunctory sexual distractions and a truly useless red herring, the narrative is cleanly plotted and the climactically revealed motive for the killings is gratifyingly tasteless. Excellent cast, there is the added pleasure of sparkling performances from Fenech (dressed by Levi's) and Schurer (underwear by Kentelle). The whole thing is topped off with a superb score, featuring Pisano's trademark musical score and high-pitched female vocals. Has replaced MACABRE as my favourite movie...

A man in a sports car roams the countryside, picking up a hitchhiker, a hooker, a drunkard and a couple of tramps. He offers them hospitality in a luxurious villa. The house is owned by his wealthy sister, Tina, and her husband, a mad scientist who carries out weird experiments with human body parts. The diabolical couple entertain their guests with booze, drugs and an LSD orgy in a room full of distorted mirrors. The guests begin to disappear one by one. The hippy couple descend into the cellar, where they find a cold store full of naked corpses. They are captured by Alfiero, and are forced to witness the murder of the hooker, who is attached to a machine (looking like a leftover from DR WHO!) which drains her blood. The 'mystery' is thus revealed: the rich couple host 'homeless' disposable people, in order to drain their blood which they sell to warring Third World countries! Just as their hideous schemes are revealed, a detective breaks in and destroys the blood-sucking machine, but not before Tina has fallen victim to it... A true cult movie. The film was apparently made in 1971, but remained unreleased until 1975. Unbridled kitsch dominates every shot, putting it in the same category as Edward D. Wood's or Ted V. Mikels most staggering works. To find other films of this ilk, you have to seek out Cesare Canevari's 'opera omnia,' or the rarest Renato Polselli films. This is not your usual 'so-bad-it's-good' film; in fact it's not that bad...it's simply the UGLIEST! Every aspect of IL PRATO, from dialogue to photography, from costumes (Tarascio sports the biggest, most offensive bowties ever seen) to sets, is the epitome of Seventies ribaldry. The script is decidedly 'delirious' and the actors all appear to be high on drugs. Never mind the clumsy social message - the wealthy bourgeois draining the blood of the homeless to get richer - just enjoy the mind warping experience. This is Ghione's third and best directorial effort, he had a promising debut in 1968 with LA RIVOLUZIONE SESSUALE, a sleazy comedy co-scripted by Dario Argento, but he was never able to top the fascinating ugliness of IL PRATO.

The film transposes the events in De Sade's infamous novel to Italy in 1944, presumably in an attempt to show the evils of Fascism. A group of physically perfect teenage boys and girls are kidnapped and taken to a remote villa. Four members of the upper classes then submit the unfortunate youngsters to all manner of sexual abuse. Pasolini's film, which provides surprisingly few philosophical insights, contains enough scatological excesses to warrant inclusion here. Recommended for coprophiliacs only.

Second Opinion: Pasolini's uncompromising final film tends to split critics. Undoubtedly powerful, the graphic and relentless abuse is enough to wear down even the most hardened viewer. A masterpiece, certainly, but one to be approached with caution by the easily distressed. David Flint

A wild, arty, trashy tale of Nazi decadence from the splendid Brass, which paved the way for a slew of (mainly Italian) Nazi exploitation movies. SALON KITTY is a high class brothel in 1939 Berlin which is used by the Nazis to spy on their own troops. With fairly graphic sex, perversion a-plenty and some heavy handed political statements from the socialist director, SALON KITTY is the jewel in the crown of the sleazy Nazi sub-genre. David Flint

Ireland 1902: Count Mamak welcomes a small travelling theatre company to his isolated castle. The Count is stunned to find that Evelyn, the beautiful lead actress, bears a strong resemblance to his dead wife, and they soon begin an affair. Their happiness is soon curtailed by a series of gnsly murders in which all the victims are decapitated. Although the deaths are initially blamed on an ancient family curse, it transpires that the murderer is the supposedly deceased Countess. This low key return to the 60's Gothics is not without a certain degree of charm. Although the killings take place offscreen, the discoveries of the severed heads provide adequate touches of the macabre. Some of the cheap sex farce sections are annoying, especially a ridiculous scene in which a kitchen maid invites another maid to grope her breasts! These diversions are redeemed by an unexpectedly poignant ending in which the Count leads his tragic wife out to a carriage which will take her away for ever. Mark Ashworth

Don't let the opening forty-five minutes of this film force you to question why you're watching a rather pedestrian cop thriller because there is a murder that abruptly changes the entire tone of the film. It involves the death of a character by straight razor and it's as nasty as any murder in the giallo genre. Antonio Sabato and Luciana Paluzzi play detectives investigating the death of a prominent businessman's daughter. They uncover a sleazy sex ring in the tradition of WHAT HAVE THEY DONE TO SOLANGE? British censors mugged the film under instruction from the RSPCA, who felt that footage of animals eating each other somehow classified as "cruelty". Other shock scenes include a man being killed by a lion in a safari park and the castration of a young tribesman. LATE NIGHT TRAINS

Full Length Movies From
The World's Leading

While on their way home from Germany to Italy for Christmas, two teenage girls are raped and murdered by a couple of thugs on a virtually empty LATE NIGHT TRAIN. The thugs are encouraged by an older, seemingly sophisticated woman who seems to derive a perverse voyeuristic pleasure from watching their sadistic antics. A chain of unlikely events leads the trio to the one of the murdered girls' middle-class home. The girl's father, a respected doctor, guesses what has happened and takes his revenge by killing the louts. Although the basic plot elements are lifted from the seminal American exploitation movie THE LAST HOUSE ON THE LEFT (1972), Lado's film betters the original in terms of production qualities, plot coherence and raw power. It's also thankfully free of the ill-timed humour that makes Wes Craven's film so hard to defend. Just remember, whatever you do, DON'T RIDE ON LATE NIGHT TRAINS from New Barnet to Finsbury Park!

A teenage boy is drawn into an eerie world within the confines of an old Venetian house. Dino Risi's restrained film is a good example of the 'morbid' genre of latin horror/thrillers which betray a more developed artistic sensibility. 'Morbid' films are suffused with an atmosphere of potential danger, building upon images of decay and contrasting these with the nascent uncertainties of puberty, or teenage sexual yearnings. Other films with a similar 'morbid' feel include QUELLA STRANA VOGLIA D'AMARE and PENSIONE PAURA.

The situation is made more complicated by the arrival of Francesca's old schoolfriend, Monica. Described by Tim Pulleine in the indispensable Monthly Film Bulletin (October 1977) as "a somewhat sombre affair" which is characterised by a "morass of voice-overs and memory flashes". He sums up by noting that the "love-making sequences... are handled rather more sensuously than usual, and Leonora Fani seems deserving of better material." The enigmatic Ms Fani had further sexual encounters in PENSIONE PAURA, SENSITIVA and Mario Landi's molto outrageous GIALLO A VENEZIA but then seemed to vanish from Italian cinema.

Emilia-Romagna, Northern Italy. The 1950's: A young painter, Stefano, travels to a small village to restore a fresco which a local artist - dubbed "The Painter of Agonies" by the townsfolk - had painted on the wall of the church. It's a graphic depiction of St. Sebastian being tortured to death by two figures, and Antonio, a friend of Stefano's, reveals that he has discovered a strange story about it and a house with windows that laugh. That night, Antonio is killed, and as more pieces of the puzzle fit together Stefano learns the horrible truth about the decadent artist and his obsession with death. Avati tells his story with exceptional skill and control, managing to create a stifling atmosphere of morbidity and horror. The details of the artist's incestuous relationship with his two sisters, his violent suicide when he discovered he had syphilis, and the priest's tale of how the church was used by the Nazis as a storehouse for corpses all add to the oppressive feeling of degeneracy and madness. Like Fellini (also from Emilia-Romagna), Avati is very much 'in touch' with the land, and the psychology of his characters is brilliantly observed. He is greatly assisted by the uniformly excellent performances from his repertory cast and his insistence on authentic language: the 'outsiders' speak standard Italian, whereas the rest of the actors speak the heavily-accented local dialect. Also worthy of note is Tommasi's eerily appropriate score, far more chilling than anything by Goblin. Avati's film is best summed up by one of its own characters who comments, "Only a really great artist could have given such an expression to death."

Three archaeologists are searching for ancient relics in the countryside when they witness a young girl being abducted. They follow the kidnappers to an isolated house. Spying on the occupants, they realize that they have run into a satanic sect who use the blood of young girls for their black magic rites. Since they are fully equipped with microphones, cameras and recorders, the archaeologists decide to get evidence for the police. They record all the going-ons and seem to thoroughly enjoy the orgies, murders and black masses. The police finally arrive, having been tipped off by a repentant member of the sect. This is an almost impossible film to track down, the only circulating print being a censored Italian tv recording. Judging by the number of cuts it must have been a very sleazy outing from a director whose work is among the most interesting yet elusive. The plot is virtually non-existent, with amateurish dialogue and editing making some scenes virtually incomprehensible. With most of the sex and nudity excised there is little left to enjoy in this mess. Some of the cast and crew (eg. actress Zaira Zoccheddu and editor Giovanni Venarucci) went on to make hard-core porn.

Bruno Mattei's down market version of SALON KITTYY includes all the excesses we've come to expect from the pathetic Nazi sub-genre, with a peculiar emphasis on the bizarre (a long haired German soldier sporting a samurai sword?) and unattractive cast. The 'action' takes place at a large villa adorned with masses of Nazi paraphernalia, where rows of naked women are pressed into sexual service for the Third Reich's war weary troops. We know they're weary because Mattei includes lots of red-tinted footage filched from a standard war film. Exploitation stalwart Manna D'Aunia (also in WOMEN'S CAMP 119, VERY CLOSE EN-

E TANATA PAURA begins promisingly with a violent death before and straight after the opening titles. Despite some quite vicious murders (eg. the killer hangs a prostitute from a tree and then sets her alight while she is still alive), there are strong elements of black humour.

Emanuelle drugs Carlo by lacing a bottle of J&B whisky (what else) and chains him up in a secret room in order to revenge the death of her sister, Francoise, who jumped in front of a train rather than endure Carlo's sexual humiliations. Using a two-way mirror Emanuelle proceeds to torture Carlo by forcing him to witness various sexual acts, including a lesbian threesome involving his current girlfriend. Half-starved and high on drugs, Carlo imagines Emanuelle's dinner guests eating human meat and then ravaging him. Eventually, Carlo breaks out of the chamber and kills his tormentor. This weird little psychological drama, from the warped minds of directors Mattei and Massaccesi, is played out with a curious amount of conviction and proves to be one of the more endearing soft-core outings. Watch out for the dire disco scene though!

Undercover photographer/reporter Emanuelle goes undercover to expose a gun-runner's 'harem' in California (where we are treated to the sight of a horse being masturbated). Emanuelle meets an Italian ancestor who invites her to Venice for a threesome with his wife and later to an orgy. Back in the USA

she infiltrates an exclusive club where rich women are serviced by stallions (cue some hard-core footage). It's here that she first witnesses the grainy 'snuff' footage which makes the uncensored version of this film so incredible. Having escaped from the stud club by seducing the lesbian in charge, Emanuelle resolves to track down the man responsible, a slimy Washington Senator.

After their inevitable sexual encounter he drugs her and flies her off to South America to witness the filming of one of these death movies first hand. Unfortunately, having gained the evidence

, her editor shelves the sensational story due to political pressure. The cop-out ending has Emanuelle and her boyfriend going to a tropical idyll, only to be disturbed by a boisterous film crew - 'Paradise lost' he moans. The amazing thing about this film is the extremely convincing use of snuff sequences.

Massaccesi utilizes shakey, hand-held cameras, scratches on the film and rough edits to make the truly disturbing scenes of women being tortured and killed seem real. Of course, none of these scenes were included in the version which was released to UK cinemas and subsequently on video. We can only hope that British trading standards officers don't get hold of the uncensored version or they'll begin another moral panic by spouting on to the guilty press about the existence of genuine snuff movies.

*Gangly transexual Ajita Wilson plays Claudine, a young reporter, who goes undercover to bust up a sex-drugs and murder, in this Dick Randall produced potboiler, that's low on thrills and filled with unappetizing skin. Traumatized by her past,

The plot is based upon a true series of murders which occurred in Correggio in 1940. An extremely old and podgy Shelley Winters plays the murderous, hatchet wielding mother who chops up her victims and boils down their remains in her 'big cauldron' (the Italian title), with considerable gusto. In a bizarre piece of casting Max Von Sydow has a dual role as a woman and the police inspector on the case. The Forties period atmosphere is significantly enhanced by some beautiful photography and lighting.

Essentially a tedious low budget war film, padded with stock footage, but included here due to some incongruous torture and sex scenes and the fact that the same director was responsible for the truly incredible LA BESTIA IN CALORE (1977). In some territories the film was promoted with the same style of crass publicity used for IL SA, SHE-WOLF OF THE SS.

Fairly grim concentration camp fodder from Mattei, who has managed to achieve the unenviable goal of coming up with one of the most tasteless examples of the genre. Pretty much devoid of any redeeming features, the film still manages to exert a morbid fascination as an example of just how low trash cinema

The most unfamiliar of the distasteful concentration camp films, although the plot about a bordello and a final rebellious massacre sounds numbingly familiar. Did it receive a cinema release anywhere else apart from Italy? Who knows? As far as I'm aware, the only other film which Gicca Palli directed is an obscure thriller, GIORNI DI SANGUE (1968).

Weak giallo from the director of PASSI DI DANZA SU UNA LAMA DI RASOIO (see DELIRIUM #1). Having been framed for a murder in a train carriage on the Istanbul-Athens express, fashion photographer Leonard Mann sets out to prove his innocence and catch the real culprit. Along the way he's helped by his Swedish girlfriend, played by the insipid Vera Kruska, and an annoying petty criminal. Despite a couple of well delineated murders (razor slashes courtesy of Genaro Visconti) and a notable lesbian coupling filmed in extreme close-up (ala' Franco) this is not a successful film. The running time is padded out with unnecessary attempts at humour, presumably in an attempt to make up for the lack of plot. The denouement is patently ridiculous.

Like Spanish trash auteur Jesus Franco, Sergio Garrone special-ised in movies which could be called 'Two For the Price of One'. With the budget, cast, crew and sets (and plot!) of one film, he quite cunningly made two films. What a bargain! One is usually 'stronger' than the other. For example LA MANO CHE NUTRE LA MORTE is gorier than LE AMANTI DEL MOSTRO (see 1974, in DELIRIUM 1), or PERVERSE OLTRE LE SBARRE has more sex 'n' violence than DETENUTE VIOLENTE (both 1984 W.I.P. movies starring Ajita Wilson). SS EXPERIMENT CAMP and the less-well-known SS CAMP 5 are no exception. Just watch the more famous one if you really have to. It's bloodier and nastier, although I wouldn't say better... Garrone is now apparently the owner of a pizza restaurant but I have strong doubts that he'll serve you two pizzas for the price of one!

Max Della Mora

Editor's Note: SS CAMP 5 is actually the more distasteful and disturbing of the two films because it contains genuine concentration camp archive footage as a background for the opening title and credits.

Powerful, overwhelming assault on the eyes and ears from Argento at his peak. Jessica Harper is perfectly cast as the innocent abroad, discovering witchcraft at a German dance academy. Goblin provides an excellent musical arrangement, a combination of thunderous noise and whispered cries of "witch!", and Argento floods the screen with a plethora of rich, deep colours, greatly enhanced by the use of 3-Tone Technicolor film stock. The set pieces are extravagantly over-the-top, the gore is explicit, and the roving camerawork is a delight. A true horror masterpiece.

This effort is not as sleazy as some of the other swastika fetish films of the period, although there is the usual selection of naked, gyrating hips and bottoms, group showers and lesbian encounters. The plot is mainly concerned with 'joy' brothel presided over by the beautiful madame Hannah, who unbeknown to her Nazi clients is actually Jewish. Having been saved from certain death Hannah is 'protected' by sado-masochist sleazebag Captain Von Stein, who loves dressing up in her underwear and being whipped. Director Caiano previously helmed an effective Barbara Steele vehicle, AMANTI D'OLTRETUMBA/ORGASMO, in 1965.

When I saw TENTACOLI in a cinema as a child, it scared the shit out of me! After all these years it still manages to give a few good scares, such as the corpse which unexpectedly pops out of the water, completely sucked dry by the giant octopus's suckers (that's what I call a blow job). There's also the night attack on a yacht, which is strangely reminiscent of the "dai Daco" opening scene in Inoshiro Honda's WAR OF THE GARGANTUAS, or the final combat between the octopus and the two trained killer whales. Oh yes, there are also human actors (all perfectly trained themselves), but they're just a filler. Max Della Mora

In the present day the ex-Commandant of a 'love camp' returns to the site to meet the attractive Jewish woman who captivated his attention. On the soundtrack we hear extracts from the Commandant's trial, and learn that he managed to escape punishment for his crimes. The film then flashes back to the 1940's and the sordid events which took place at the camp. Although a direct rip-off of THE NIGHT PORTER and SALON KITTY, (emulating entire scenes from them both), this is a classier example of the nasty Nazi films, with superior production values. Canevari's direction is considerably more stylish than that of Mattei and Garone, and the brisk editing works exceptionally well. Aside from a portentous music score, full of trumpets and drum-rolls, there's an overblown title song 'Lise' that will have you laughing every time it crops up.

A group of oil explorers discover the last cannibalistic tribe in captured by the tribe and forced to endure various humiliations, Massimo Foschi escapes with the help of Me Me Lai. This was the second Italian film in a curious sub-genre, with an essentially racist sub-text view of the Third World, which began with

Umberto Lenzi's IL PAESE DEL SELVAGGIO/DEEP RIVER

SAVAGES in 1972. There is the usual use of stock wildlife footage and unforgivable animal cruelty (a crocodile is garrotted and disembowelled). This film, along with PSYCHIC KILLER, comprised the first of many X-rated double-bills I went to see at the cinema in the days before mainstream only multiplexes.

Second Opinion: CANNIBAL HOLOCAUST is generally considered to be a more powerful film and in it's visions of cruelty, ULTIMO MONDO CANNIBALE can't be compared. But to this viewer, Deodato's earlier film is the more powerful. None of the characters in HOLOCAUST reveal much emotional depth - they're all assholes who, because of their callous actions deserve to die. They are the monsters, not the natives. On the contrary, ULTIMO offers an innocent man who is transformed by his horrific experiences into a 'savage.' This is more disturbing. Another factor HOLOCAUST doesn't have is the lyrically beautiful actress Me Me Lai. Unlike the other cannibals, she's innocent and sympathetic which makes her punishment all the more horrible: she's beheaded, slit from throat to crotch and then hollowed out like a canoe! Me Me could be considered the Queen of the Cannibals because she was also in Umberto Lenzi's EATEN ALIVE.

"Touring the U.S., a young European couple are caught in a nightmare web of robbery, murder, sexual abuse and mental torment - they picked up a hitch-hiker!" The nasty hitch-hiker in question is played to the hilt by the king of scumbag villains, David Hess. Nero and Clery are both excellent as the young couple who unwittingly become involved with a vicious trio of escaping bank robbers. Ennio Morricone contributes a simple, yet haunting banjo and guitar based theme, reminiscent of his work for spaghetti westerns. Director Campanile specialized in comedies, however his direction here is first-rate and the atmosphere of sexual tension mixed with pure greed is never allowed to dissipate. The British release is slightly cut. Video: UK - VTC, Derann, Renown, Vidage.

This is trash cinema at its utmost trashiest and really has to be seen to be believed. An astonishingly tedious sub-plot involving a group of partisans alternates with the main plot detailing the nefarious activities of an evil female Nazi doctor. Some of the most tasteless scenes of torture ever committed to film are rendered inoffensive by the sheer ineptitude this farago. The Beast himself, played by comedy actor Salvatore Boccardo, grunts and jumps up and down with such wild abandon it's difficult to take him seriously. Macha Magali (also to be seen in LA CASA PRIVATA PER LE SS) is no Ilsa, though the infamous she-wolf is clearly her role model. She overdoes her kinky Nazi bit so much the end result is almost camp farce. Video: UK - Video For Pleasure; Holland - Video For Pleasure Venezuela - label unknown

The film depicts erotic entanglements of various types within a 'typical' nuclear provincial family. There are softcore and hardcore versions, neither of which are of much interest. Ricci is a director of little talent who would turn his hand to any genre which seemed flavour of the month. His CONAN cash-in, THOR IL CONQUISTATORE (1982) is particularly difficult to endure.

A group of women are transported to a camp where they are subjected to the usual round of indignities: stripping, shaving and rabid attacks from assorted lesbians. Tania Nobel, a girl from an aristocratic background, is hotly pursued by the camp's campy commandant. Eventually, she puts a razor blade in a cork and conceals it inside her vagina, thus slicing his salami for good. Most of the girls then escape to the accompaniment of soothing music. One of the better death camp movies, although that isn't saying much. Unlike the unpardonably trashy offerings from Sergio Garrone (SS EXPERIMENT CAMP and SS CAMP 5), this film attempts to work a vaguely historical perspective into the proceedings, but with all the steamy sapphic action it passes almost unnoticed. Di Silvestro at least has the undoubted - though rather tactless - advantage of having Teutonic glamour gals Schurer and Stubing in the cast. Erna Schurer's hairstyle resembles an over-lacquered croissant, but the scene in which she bashes Stefania (ZOMBIE FLESH-EATERS) D'Amario's brains out carries a genuine charge of horror. John Steiner obviously finds it difficult to take the enterprise seriously, although Polito manages to convince as the uppercrust Tania. The hazy flashback in which the two first meet before the war breaks out is breath-takingly inane. Mark Ashworth

Eager to explore the gore 'n' grind market, Massaccesi began to take the BLACK EMANUELLE sequels into stranger and stranger directions. This one has our nymphomaniac reporter investigating reports of a cannibal tribe in the jungle. The film opens in a mental hospital with an attractive, stocking-clad nurse suddenly appearing around a corner with her clothes torn open and one of her breasts bitten off! The expeditionary party, which includes a nun (!) encounter a boa constrictor, quick sand and eventually the cannibal tribe. Plenty of graphic eviscerations and sweaty sex, combined with a surprisingly lively plot, make this one of the more entertaining of the series.

In India, Emanuelle meets a guru who has discovered the secret of prolonged sexual pleasure. While attending his Kama Sutra sessions she meets Mary, an American girl who has been assaulted in Rome. Cora and Mary travel to Rome to avenge Mary and find themselves embroiled in a white slave operation which finally leads them to New York. Video: UK - VPD (cut), Rogue (cut)

A somewhat talky giallo, clearly modelled on Argento's thrillers. Paola Tedesco plays a dancer who is stalked by a killer. The murder scenes are well staged, particularly the strangling of weird looking Fernando Cerulli in the bath. Director Antonio Bido clearly wants to follow in Argento's footsteps, but this film lacks the cinematic flamboyance of its role models.

Fairly big-budget copy of the set piece deaths formula already explored in THE OMEN. Industrial magnate Kirk Douglas plans to build a vast thermonuclear power plant in a Third World country. Unfortunately, old Kirk discovers that an inscription in a cave near the proposed desert site predicts the coming of the Apocalypse. Events begin to take an OMEN-ous turn as Kirk's huge computer spews out incomprehensible formulae which disconcertingly corresponds with the cave inscription. Several deaths later, the Anti-Christ is revealed to be none other than angelic looking Simon Ward. Well, there's no surprise there.

This amusingly obvious time-waster turns up regularly on late night tv.

Rudolph Hess's former adjutant, Werner Uhland, is assigned by the SS to discover the sexual weaknesses of the seven leading German intelligentsia because they are suspected of being disloyal to the Third Reich. Using secret microphones and the sexual lure of group of attractive women, Uhland must secure the evidence necessary to justify their execution, before Hitler's planned invasion of Russia. The intelligentsia are invited to a reunion at Schloss Grunewald, the home of Helmut Von Danzing and indulge themselves in a frenzy of sexual gratification. At midnight the SS arrive and execute all the guests, along with Uhland and the unfortunate women. Being a rather more sombre, historical affair, this was the only one of the Italian Nazi pics to receive a British cinema release, albeit in a truncated 85 minute version. The full length version contains enough sleazy scenes to warrant a look, although it's thankfully nowhere near as distasteful as the other films of its ilk. It's nice to see Luciano Rossi playing a bearded intellectual for a change, instead of the usual red herring characters he was typecast as in gialli.

Two delinquents, Paolo and Joe, meet each other after being thrown out of a middle-class party and soon become friends. They indulge in a bout of sadistic sexual violence with Joe's girlfriend Anna, but are interrupted by her neighbour. In the violent melee that follows the neighbour is mortally wounded. Before embarking on a petty crime spree Paolo explains his philosophy of life: "Cats have the best idea, they give fuck-all for the whole shitty world. They just live for each day." Tiring of seemingly minor diversions, the hapless duo acquire guns and take a group of rich people hostage in an expensive restaurant. This is a thriller in the same mode as LATE NIGHT TRAINS, with a script that uses thoroughly obnoxious protagonists to use and abuse the often hypocritical middle-class characters.

Jennifer O'Neil plays a woman who is tormented by premonitions of various people's deaths - including her own. A rather plodding supernatural thriller which has little to recommend it and proves that unless he has the right material director Fulci is only a mediocre talent. Bava's last cinematic film is a stylistic tour-de-force, which effectively chronicles Dora's descent into madness as her son Marco is seemingly possessed by the spirit of her murdered ex-husband. The camera constantly prowls and inanimate objects seem to come to life. The half-glimpsed shots of the dead man are disturbingly presented due to the use of SHOCK cuts. The film was released to cinemas in the UK in a memorable double-bill with Vicente Aranda's THE BLOOD SPATTERED BRIDE.

Emilia-Romagna, Northern Italy. The 1930's: Whilst researching a book, Dante travels to an isolated castle where the owners - the Zanettis - are mourning their recently deceased patriarch. An old manuscript predicts nine deaths within the family circle, and soon the corpses pile up... The total antithesis of LA CASA DALLE FINESTRE CHE RIDONO, this is a farcical interpretation of an Agatha Christie 'Ten Little Indians' plot. Despite some genuinely funny moments, Avati occasionally lets his improvisational tendencies run away with him and the cast lapse into tiresome bouts of slapstick mugging. As usual, he peoples his environment with a fascinating array of warped characters, including an obsessive masturbator and a Hollywood cowboy. The period atmosphere is lovingly recreated, and Rachini's photography of the misty winter landscape is beautifully eerie. Comedy horrors may not be to everyone's taste, but the wickedly humorous murders and subversive sense of fun brought to the material certainly make this one of the best.

Another ridiculous piece of hokum from hack director Ricci. A skin-diver (Garcia) is hired by crooked American (Kennedy) to salvage a black box from a crashed plane on the seabed. He finds the plane, but also an underwater cave that is guarded by sharks. Strange things begin to happen and he resurfaces after glimpsing a mysterious sunken city (Atlantis?). The film then stumbles from one weird set piece to another until it culminates in a truly perplexing ending - the film-makers probably didn't understand it either because a large question mark is the last thing to appear on the screen! Some clear photography of the curiously muted sharks exerts a strange fascination but the ludicrous special effects and fake looking models drag the film way down. Ricci's dreadful spaghetti westerns, GREAT TREASURE HUNT and WESTERN KID prove he can't make a decent film in any genre. Alan Tozer

 Susan Stevenson and her brother Arthur fly to the 'haunted' island of Rocca in New Guinea, ostensibly to search for her ethnologist husband, who has disappeared in the jungle. In reality they are more interested in locating a valuable uranium deposit. After a series of set backs, including a crocodile attack and the murderous attentions of a group of masked men, they eventually stumble upon her husband's remains and discover that they have been defied by the Pukas, a cannibalistic tribe. Although it contains the usual offal slinging and unforgivable shots of wild animals being killed, this glossily produced cannibal caper works well as an H. Rider Haggard style action adventure. The starchy cast and panoramic locations elevate it way above the level of the miserable CANNIBAL FEROX, and it's pacier than Ruggero Deodato's dreary CANNIBAL.

Other acts include simulated S&M, mud wrestling, Ajita cavorting all over a huge polystyrene penis and grainy stock footage of South American tribal dancing. There are classic no-miss plugs for good old J&B with a bottle placed dead centre on a table in the foreground and shots of Ajita swinging away. After a mildly erotic dance number, accompanied by an upbeat score from Cipriani, this overlong film soon gets bogged down detailing the black magic activities of Dana, a precocious brat played by pubescent Lara Wendel. Anne Heywood, plays her increasingly frantic mother, and proves to be as irritating as she was in SCENES FROM A MURDER (1972). Ian Bannen stumbles about as a drunken professor, delivering tediously obvious monologues about the nature of good (white) and evil (black) while a bewildered set of actors attempt to play chess. The film ends unexpectedly when wicked little Dana catches a cab to the Vatican and gives a 'knowing' look to the camera. She's obviously going to give the Pope some sensible advice on birth control. Director and screenwriter Pier Carpi clearly fails to understand the dynamics of plot development, preferring to pad the film out with flashes of nudity (including full frontal shower scenes of the teenage Wendel) and dream sequences shown in negative.

Newly wed Amanda cannot understand why her aristocratic husband, Andrea does not want to consummate their marriage. It transpires that he is involved in black magic and has other plans for her. This post-EXORCIST satanic possession movie contains the requisite amount of sex and violence, but apart from an effective slow motion scene in which the beleaguered Mell witnesses Avram and Escriva making love to Laura Trotter, it never really achieves anything more than looking like a cheap, but titillating, soap opera. The proceedings are further hampered by an uninspiring and morose score by Carlo Savina.
Marisa Mell - previously to be seen in MARTA, HISTORIA DE UNA TRAJICION and briefly in SETTE ORCHIDEE MACCHIAIE

by some Italian actresses and seems to have also taken some short-cuts in the acting department. The more sultry and talented

Former art director Flavio Mogherini's thriller is an assured attempt to transpose giallo elements into a different setting, in this case Australia. Following the discovery of an unidentifiable young woman's body (her face has been horribly mutilated) on the beach the police, aided by retired detective Ray Milland, try to unravel the complicated events which led to her death. The parallel strands of the plot are skillfully interwoven by Mogherini so that the viewer is presented with flashbacks of the murdered woman's life and the continuing investigation side by side. There is a keen attention to detail and the tribulations of the individual characters are considerably more involving than in other films of the period. Highly recommended.

Only the Italians could have come up with a warped film in which there's a black gloved killer who appears to stab female victims to death with a huge phallus! However as this is a giallo, all is not what it seems. The plot revolves around uninhibited Dagmar (Stefania D'Amario from ZOMBIE FLESH-EATERS) and her quiet sister Ursula who check into a hotel on the coast. The other guests, including an aristocrat and a druggie, seem a perverted lot. Aside from the tacky murders and comy shots of the killer's eyes there are some fairly graphic sex scenes (masturbation, lesbian and oral) which border on hard-core. Overall the film recalls the tone of some of Jesus Franco's early 70's films - the seaside setting, the white-walled hotel, the blank stare of Ursula

- although it doesn't have the same cheap look. Mention must go to Mimmi Uva's score which mixes delicious female vocals with funky interludes and a typically daft song, "Your Eyes are my life, and they know how to make me die. That's why I love your eyes."

An OMEN inspired story shot in the U.S. The twist here is that instead of being the offspring of the Devil, the child (a little girl) is descended from an evil space mutant! John Huston (the visitor of the title) arrives from outer space with the task of returning her to her own planet. Given that the girl's antics are more akin to a spoilt brat than the anti-christ, the viewer is left to wonder what all the fuss is about. Shelley Winters puts in a good performance as a housekeeper who isn't all she seems, director Sam Peckinpah is onscreen for all of two minutes and Franco Nero has an unbilled cameo in a ridiculous blonde wig. The film is really rather boring and this isn't helped by poor special effects. Italians don't have a clue when it comes to science fiction. Producer Assonitis has made a number of films as director himself, most notably the 1983 production MADHOUSE.

Whether by accident or design, Massaccesi manages to create a genuinely morbid atmosphere which pervades the entire film and recalls his earlier DEATH SMILES ON A MURDERER. Persistent rumours that a real dead body was used in the gruesome autopsy scene proved to be false when the director confirmed that "we bought off from a butcher" in an interview in COLD SWEAT 9. Four American reporters go to the Amazon to make a documentary about cannibal tribes. Deodato's second excursion into the cannibal sub-genre is a more infamous work than ULTIMO MONDO CANNIBALE (1976). The central premise is that the so-called 'civilised' world exploits the Third World, however this is a film which takes the high moral ground while exploiting the subject matter for maximum visceral effect. The extreme realism of the gore and the cinema-verite hand-held camera style led to the film to be amongst the first to be labelled a 'video nasty', and more recently, ignorant trading standards officers have called it a 'snuff film' (widely reported without question in the British press!). The morose, yet memorable, score by Riz Ortolani definitely adds to the film's impact.

Aldo is a serious writer who is obliged to write pornography in order to make ends meet. He conceals various sexual encounters - with a soldier in a sex cinema, in a company boardroom, with a lesbian - for a fictional character named 'Bianca Maria', whom he models on a woman he has seen in a neighbouring apartment. Eventually, he goes to bed with the woman. Martyn Autry commented in the Monthly Film Bulletin that this is an "unusually self-aware sex movie that raises pertinent if simplistic questions about masturbatory fantasies via the schematic conflict of its writer-hero."

Fenech is as engaging as ever, and the costume designer provides her with a range of fabulous outfits. A luxury jungle hotel complex is besieged by a giant alligator which the locals revere as a 'The Great God Kruna'. Faintly cheesy reworking of JAWS, which despite maintaining Martino's usual professional standards, fails to add up to anything other than a slightly superior rendering of a routine idea. The bodies of Flavia and her architect husband, Fabio, are found near the docks. She has been drowned and he has been brutally stabbed with a pair of tailor's scissors. Flavia's best friend, Marzia, is questioned by the police, and soon a chain of extremely brutal slayings is set in motion. A shocking and sleazy chiller from Landi, who was responsible for many Italian tv adaptations of 'Inspector Maigret.' This has a similar televisual flatness, complete with a plodding detective who spends his time eating hard-boiled eggs. The sheer grubby nastiness of the explicit murders has rarely been equalled, and even picturesque Venice looks more like seedy Streatham. The demises include a man being doused in petrol and set alight, scissors being thrust into a hooker's crotch and Giordano being tied to a kitchen table, having her leg messily sawn off with a carving knife and then being stuck in the fridge. Add to this a generous helping of voyeuristic and kinky sex scenes which leave little to the imagination, and it's easy to see why one Italian critic called it 'the most disgusting film ever shown.'

An order of nuns become 'possessed' by a statue and indulge in a wanton orgy of sex and violence. Clearly inspired by Borowczyk's L'INTERNODI UN CONVENTO (1977), this softcore religious romp is one of director Massaccesi's more successful attempts at eroticism. The film is suffused with a strong atmosphere of simmering sexuality which is at odds with the repressive religious regime. Nico Fidenco's evocative score is somewhat reminiscent of the 'Tubular Bells' theme used in THE EXORCIST.

Another classic example of 'bad' cinema from production company Midia and hack director Gariazzo, who gave the world PLAY MOTEL the same year. For some unfathomable reason I've watched this film again on several occasions and enjoyed it every time! Perhaps it's the pathetically contrived way the plot uses every opportunity to undress the actresses, the ridiculous 'alien' costumes or the delightfully tacky recurrent musical theme? One thing I do know is that the film is not worth purchasing for £20, the incredible price which a fetish mail-order firm were recently charging for it!

Four zombies run a motel and try (unsuccessfully) to eat their guests, including a drunken fat businessman, an obnoxious family and an attractive young woman who, to the consternation of the zombies, wanders around in black 'see-thru' French knickers. After various calamities the luckless living dead are chased to a supermarket by the army and a horde of hungry zombies. In the end, the whole thing turns out to have been the gravedigger's nightmare. Clearly a spoof on Romero's DAWN OF THE DEAD, this is one of the more amusing comedy horrors. The title is inspired by the previous year's comedy IO TIGRO, TU TIGRI, EGLI TIGRA.

The survivors of a wrecked prison ship are washed ashore on an uncharted island where a mad doctor (Cotten) surgically transforms men into amphibians. These 'fishmen' are being used by an unscrupulous Englishman, Edmund Rackham, to retrieve the treasures of the lost city of Atlantis. One of the most enchanting fantasy films Italy has produced, this Jules Verne-style actioner skillfully combines romantic interest, in the shape of Barbara Bach, with swashbuckling flamboyance. Though clearly aimed at a younger audience than usual, there is still a grisly voodoo ceremony presided over by sultry Beryl Cunningham and the monsters themselves have a nightmarishly embryonic quality. The movie ends on a spectacular note with a well-orchestrated flurry of modestly budgeted special effects. A delight from start to finish. For the American release Roger Corman's New World Pictures removed some of the original footage, added a couple of extra gore scenes and called the movie SCREAMERS. Most of the additional U.S. footage consisted of a prologue in which genre stalwarts Cameron Mitchell and Mel Ferrer are killed in a beach cave. Mark Ashworth

At a seance, the evil spirit of Countess Lucrezia is summoned up and proceeds to unzip one of the male member's flies, then tears off the sexy blonde's dress (Patrizia Webley). All hell lets loose as the malevolent force is soon forcing resident nun Sister Sofia to do all kinds of uneccelesiastical things to herself before setting off for the sleeping Linda's room. It's party time at the house and the guests stand dumbfounded as Linda reveals her shapely body while spouting out a stream of expletives. She writhes in demonic ecstasy as Bianchi offers us Jesus Franco-style crotch shots, just in case we are in doubt as to what the guests are gawping at. MALABIMBA somehow manages to keep the sex and the story going at the same time, mainly because the sex is the story [Ed - There's a version with hard-core inserts added], but with this kind of movie there's not a lot to get analytical about. Bianchi may be no Jodorowsky or Zulawski, but his films are always worth checking out. The story ends with Sister Sofia throwing herself off the parapet because she can't come to terms with letting Linda fist-fuck her. On the other hand, maybe Linda's fist wasn't all that entered her and she decided to do a Father Karras style sacrifice to end the chain. Richard Stalin

Mr D'Amato delivers yet another cheesy slice of salacious sleaze. The film begins with George Eastman in a lunatic asylum sneaking off for a frenzied stand-up quickie with one of the nurses, while another male inmate takes in an eyeful and masturbates furiously. The rest of the movie is told in flashback and shows how old George landed in the asylum. In an obvious attempt to cash-in on Lucio Fulci's ZOMBI 2 the plot revolves around a Caribbean island, voodoo rites and a horde of pasty-faced zombies, with the addition of sex and comedy. Massaccesi himself described the results as "a farce." The ending suggests that the whole story may have been the mad fantasy of a lunatic. The sex and horror combination was taken one stage further with PORNO HOLOCAUST, which may have been shot back-to-back with this film.

Hugely enjoyable trash cinema from a master of such rudimentary nonsense. The titular motel is the setting for this excuse to display as much naked female flesh and wall-to-wall sex as the plot will allow... and what a plot! There's a blackmailer who photographs nude models during the day-time and spends his evenings snapping couples in the act at the play motel. There's also a black-gloved murderer who seems to have wandered in straight from a giallo. The only clues to the identity of the killer are some brief eyeball macros. Tired looking Inspector Steffen is on hand as the detective on the case. Regular viewers of Italian sleaze will recognise most of the cast, notably Enzo Fischella and well-endowed blonde Patrizia Webby, who can also be seen getting it together in the delightful MALABIMBA. For lovers of inane ditties there are a couple of splendidly awful (and rather catchy songs). The ubiquitous product placement for J&B whisky is well in evidence with two bottles featured prominently in the same scene (just in case you don't get the message!)

The Spanish equivalent of a Carry On movie...but weirder. Tiny Tim warbles 'Tiptoe Through The Tulips' over the opening segment. Skulls talk from buckets, sandwiches are made with live lizards, a lecherous dwarf lunks under a woman's skirt as she writhes about - this is all a bit surreal. POLVOS MAGICOS was one of a spate of moorish grossing comedies which Jose Larraz directed for Spanish producer Jose Frade. Spanish comedies may be an acquired taste, but if you want to find out what it's about, this is a good place to start

Mark Shanon leads a scientific expedition to a mysterious island. After seemingly endless soft and hard-core sex scenes the group finally arrive on the island only to discover that it is inhabited by a mutant with a huge phallus. He subsequently kills the male members of the expedition and rapes the females. Ann Goren is kidnapped by the monster who mistakenly recognises her as his dead wife. Brawny Mark Shanon saves her and they set out to sea in a rowing boat to fuck happily ever. There are some moments of pure 'genius' such as when one of the characters comments that there are no signs of life, yet on the soundtrack you can hear birds chirping away. The dialogue is also unbelievable, such as when Shanon and Goren discuss the pros and cons of deep-frozen lobsters compared with American hot dogs! It's uncertain who Massaccesi was aiming the film at because the combination of hard-core and horror is unlikely to have attracted either the raincoat crowd or gore fans. Maybe he simply knew that it would ultimately be appreciated by fans of the weird and diverse.

With a plot derived from LATE NIGHT TRAINS (based in turn on LAST HOUSE ON THE LEFT), this film could make no claims for originality. Nevertheless, the plot, like the train itself moves along at a cracking pace. Three petty criminals take control of a train and unwittingly expose all the sexual vice and petty jealousies of the bourgeois passengers. A good cast perform all that is required of them and writer/actor Luigi Montefiore has to be credited for coming up with a first-rate exploitation movie which is only marred by Marcello Giombini's unsuitable disco beat soundtrack.

This dream-like film opens with the murder of a beautiful woman as a bloody hand emerges from a lake to drag her into the watery depths. Years later, Lilian, the leather clad daughter of the murdered woman returns to the small village where she was born. All around the village she encounters symbols of magic. Things turn nasty when, on a nostalgic visit to her childhood school, she is attacked by a hooded man with an axe. Every man who has sex with Lilian, (she always passes out when she reaches orgasm), dies soon after. All this is observed by her petulant and beautiful sister, Lilith who spies on their love-making and frigs herself furiously. It transpires that the two sisters have a psychic connection, and Lilith is possessed by the spirit of the witch Kira. The film ends with the sisters having a vicious cat-fight in which they tear each other's dresses off. There are echoes of French director Jean Rollin's erotic horror in this film, particularly in the fog shrouded graveyard scenes.

More fun from the magnificent Midia company... Dallesandro acts mean and moody (again) as a criminal who returns to a small holiday villa to dig up some stolen money hidden beneath the fireplace. Unfortunately, his plans are interrupted when a young couple and their female friend arrive. The basic premise, courtesy of hack director Gariazzo (THE SEXORCIST, PLAY MOTEL) allows for the requisite amounts of sex and violence expected by an exploitation audience. Sleazy highlights include Dallesandro peeking in on naked Lorraine De Selle as she masturbates to the sound of the couple in the bedroom having loud, passionate sex, and Dallesandro forcing Macchia and De Selle to fuck at gunpoint while Bhen watches. Di Leo had improved his directorial techniques slightly since LA BESTIA UCCIDE A SANGUE FREDDO/LAUGHTER HOTEL (see DE-LIRIUM #1) although clearly he's still plowing the same field of tacky tits n' terror. The plug for J&B whisky is more blatant than ever - De Selle is seen carrying a whole crate of the stuff!

A minor horror cult classic which gained veteran director Fulci a strong following amongst gorehound fans for its unflinching depiction of visceral violence. The zombies are far more grotesque and chilling than those in Romero's DAWN OF THE DEAD (of which this is the unofficial 'prequel') and despite some awkward plot contrivances there's a really sweaty and uncomfortable atmosphere on the Caribbean island where most of the action occurs. The simplistic synthesizer score is memorably infectious. The film is only really marred by an unintentionally comic ending in which a New York radio reporter is heard screaming "I've just been informed that zombies have entered the building. They're at the door! They're coming in! Whhhhoaaargh!!!!!!" The film was released to UK cinemas in a memorable double-bill with THE TOOLBOX

a 'video nasty'. Fulci had
